Program Description:
The New Dilemmas in Ethics training has been developed to help counselors and supervisors gain skills to appropriately manage ethical dilemmas, which have been created as a result of technology and social media. This training will provide an overview of the use of technology and the ethical dilemmas associated with the use of technology. Topics will include the use of social media and social networking, dilemmas surrounding emailing clients, conducting internet searches, and online consultations.

Educational Objectives:
At the conclusion of this program participants should be able to:
- Develop a framework and understanding related to ethical implications with regard to the use of technology in their work.
- Explore how professional ethical codes may be impacted though the use of technology.
- Summarize and demonstrate an understanding of legal issues and current legislation which both supports and negates technology as it relates to the field.

Target Audience:
This introductory program is directed toward clinicians and other professionals from both the mental health and substance abuse treatment fields who work with consumers with co-occurring disorders.
